Remaining a priest is just one of the decisions Father Daniel Patrick Murphy finds himself facing. Now in his sixties, he also struggles with whether to stay in a relationship with Jonathan Slovanco, the man he's loved with the depth of his soul for thirty years. And Father Murphy isn't the only person struggling. Two of his former students are battling serious issues, both internally and within the lives they live out in the world. Three men—one an aging gay priest and two young gay men—are being tested by life. And Father Murphy wonders if he has the strength, courage, and power to navigate the lion's den of his psyche.
